

Safeguarding Ontario's retirement home residents

Table of Contents

About Us	1
Finding A Home	3
Reporting Harm	6
Complaints: Know Your Options	8
Emergency Fund	11

ABOUT US

Committed to protecting seniors in Ontario

The Retirement Homes Regulatory Authority, or the RHRA, is responsible for the protection of seniors living in licensed retirement homes across Ontario. All the work we do at the RHRA is driven by a vision that seniors living in retirement homes will live in dignity and have the support and knowledge needed to make informed choices about their care options.

We are an independent, not-for-profit organization that makes sure Ontario's retirement homes are following the Retirement Homes Act, 2010 (the Act) on behalf of the Government of Ontario. Working closely with community partners and other agencies, the RHRA provides an umbrella of protection to more than 60,000 seniors living in licensed retirement homes across the province.

The RHRA is responsible for protecting and ensuring the safety of seniors living in Ontario retirement homes by:

- Licensing and inspecting retirement homes across Ontario.
- Issuing orders to ensure compliance with the Act.
- Imposing Administrative Monetary Penalties (fines) as required.
- Ordering operators to stop operating as retirement homes if required.
- Informing the public and educating the retirement home sector and residents about the Act, regulations and role of the RHRA.
- Providing the public with detailed information about licensed retirement homes through its Retirement Home Database.

RHRA

Get the full picture when choosing a retirement home

There are over 750 licensed retirement homes in Ontario. The RHRA's Retirement Home Database makes it easy to find out whether a home is licensed, what care services it offers and other important information about the home, such as any conditions on the licence. Inspection reports for each home gives you a more complete picture of each home's track record of compliance with the Act to help you make informed decisions.

Somewhere to turn if you need assistance

Residents can count on the RHRA to respond to complaints or concerns relating to a licensed retirement home in Ontario, and to take appropriate action. Retirement homes must meet the requirements and standards set out in the Act. It's the RHRA's job to enforce those requirements and standards and follow up when they are not being met.

This may include one or more of these steps:

- Informing residents and members of their family about their options.
- Responding to reports of harm or risk of harm, such as abuse, neglect or misuse of a resident's money.
- Responding to complaints made about a retirement home that may not be following the Act.
- Inspecting homes and/or taking enforcement action.
- Liaising with other community partners to address concerns that go beyond the RHRA's jurisdiction.

For more information, or to report a complaint, please call 1-855-ASK-RHRA (1-855-275-7472) or visit www.rhra.ca.

Residents have rights

The Act sets out a Residents' Bill of Rights. This includes the right for residents to live in a safe and clean environment, the right to know what care services are provided and how much they cost, the right to fully participate in care planning and decisions and much more.

Retirement homes are also required to respect and promote these rights by posting them in the home and educating staff. The Residents' Bill of Rights and the Act clearly explain what residents are entitled to and the responsibilities of retirement home operators to ensure residents' rights are met.

FINDING A HOME

Reliable information at your fingertips

The RHRA's Retirement Home Database provides information on inspections, compliance and care services for every licensed retirement home in the province.

The Retirement Home Database is easy to navigate and offers a variety of ways to search, including by the home's name, location, licence status, number of suites and care services offered. A few simple clicks will also give you more detail about:

- Licence application refusals
- Homes licensed with conditions
- Revoked licences
- Enforcement measures or prosecutions
- Homes operating without a licence

Fees and rental arrangements

In addition to the Act, retirement home operators are also required to comply with the Residential Tenancies Act, 2006 (RTA). The RTA governs the relationship between landlords and tenants, including rent and some matters relating to care services and privacy. If you have questions about your rent or other tenant matters, you can contact the provincial Landlord and Tenant Board at 1-888-332-3234 or www.sjto.gov.on.ca/ltb.

What services do you need?

The right care services to support living as independently as possible and with dignity is a top priority for many when looking for a retirement home.

The RHRA helps people learn about the care services each home provides, with a standardized checklist of what is and isn't offered to make it easy to compare homes.

Tips for finding a home

Plan. Make a list of the care services you need now or may need in the future. This can include anything from help with bathing to meal preparation and medication administration.

Consider. Now is the time to think about what you would want in an ideal living environment. Be sure to think about the community, the size and type of building you want to live in, the accommodations you would prefer and how far family or friends would be able to travel to visit. Can the home accommodate independent living and what does it offer residents in the way of events and community activities in addition to care services?

Research. You can find out about the home's inspections reports, and services offered for the more than 750 retirement homes in Ontario through the RHRA's Retirement Home Database. Look up homes by name, licence status, city or even postal code. Make note of any questions you would like to follow up on with your preferred residences.

Tour. Visit your top options in person. Many homes offer tours, meetings with staff and even the opportunity to enjoy an activity or a meal. This will give you a better idea of whether the home is the right fit. Be sure to bring along your list of questions to make the most of your time.

What's the difference between retirement and long-term care homes?

Retirement homes are different from long-term care homes in many ways. If you are considering a retirement home, here's what you need to know:

Oversight. The RHRA regulates retirement homes under the Act and the Ministry of Long-Term Care regulates long-term care homes under the Long-Term Care Homes Act, 2007. Both afford residents protections.

Eligibility. Generally, there is no specific criteria to be eligible to live in a retirement home and you may look into as many retirement homes as you wish. With a long-term care home, there is eligibility criteria which must be met.

Assistance. People who live in retirement homes range from fully independent to those requiring more complex care. Retirement homes choose what care services to offer residents. Residents may purchase any of the care services offered by the retirement home, or arrange for external care providers, including private-pay or publicly funded. In long-term care facilities, residents require around-the-clock care every day. They have their clinical care needs assessed and met through the home, but must pay for accommodation charges. Government subsidies are available for those who cannot pay for accommodations.

Funding. Retirement homes do not receive government funding and residents pay the full cost of their accommodation and any care services they choose to purchase from the home directly. Regional health services can help residents navigate subsidies for care services.

If you think a long-term care home may be more suited to your needs, detailed information is available on the Ministry of Long-Term Care's website at www.health.gov.on.ca, or the Ontario Long-Term Care Association's website at www.oltca.com.

REPORTING HARM

A shared duty to protect residents

One of the ways the law protects retirement home residents is by requiring people to immediately report to the RHRA certain situations involving harm or risk of harm to a resident.

These include:

- Abuse or neglect of a resident
- Improper or incompetent treatment or care of a resident
- Unlawful conduct
- Any misuse or misappropriation of a resident's money

Under the Act, anyone who has witnessed or has reason to suspect these situations have or may occur must report it to the RHRA. This includes retirement home operators, staff members, external care providers, substitute decision makers and family members. Regulated health professionals such as doctors, nurses and social workers must also report these situations. These are called mandatory reports.

Residents may report to the RHRA; however, they are not required to do so.

Under the Act, anyone making a report to the RHRA is protected from retaliation. Additionally, mandatory reports can be made anonymously.

To make a report to the RHRA, please call 1-855-ASK-RHRA (1-855-275-7472).

What happens when the RHRA receives a report of harm?

When a mandatory report is received, the RHRA makes inquiries to determine whether a retirement home is compliant with the Act. The RHRA may also send an inspector to the retirement home to conduct an unannounced inspection.

Under the Act, RHRA inspectors have the power to:

- Inspect the home and its operations
- Review, copy and remove records and other documents
- Interview residents and other individuals
- Call on other experts for assistance

Inspectors may also involve other agencies or authorities such as the police, fire officials, public health and regulated health profession colleges, as appropriate.

What happens after an inspection?

Once an inspection has been completed, the retirement home is provided with a draft inspection report, and the operator may provide a response. A final inspection report (which does not contain confidential information) is posted on the RHRA's Retirement Home Database and in the retirement home.

If a retirement home is not in compliance with the Act, the RHRA will determine next steps, such as issuing a warning letter, a monetary penalty or an order to comply. The RHRA may also conduct a follow-up inspection to see if the retirement home has come into compliance.

COMPLAINTS: KNOW YOUR OPTIONS

Types of complaints the RHRA can address

The RHRA handles complaints about violations of the Act or its regulations related to:

- Care services
- Safety standards
- Other safeguards (such as staff and volunteer training and trust account administration)

Even if your concerns do not relate specifically to the Act, RHRA staff may be able to provide you with information about other possible sources of help.

How to file a complaint

There may be a time when you need more information, or have an issue or concern about the retirement home in which you live.

All retirement homes are required to have a procedure in place to respond swiftly to complaints. This includes training staff and sharing information about the complaint process with residents. Homes must investigate and respond within ten business days, or let you know when you can expect the issue to be resolved.

If you have a concern, bringing it to the attention of your home's staff or management team is the best first step. We understand talking to your home's staff about your concerns may not always be easy. RHRA staff can help with information and suggestions which may assist with those difficult conversations.

To learn more about the complaint process or to file a formal complaint with the RHRA about a retirement home, you can fill out the RHRA Complaint Form, which is available on our website at www.rhra.ca, or call us at 1-855-ASK-RHRA (1-855-275-7472).

When to involve the RHRA

If you believe a retirement home is not following the Act, or its own complaints process, you can file a complaint with the RHRA.

If you choose to file a complaint, the Act protects you and anyone else providing information to the RHRA from retaliation of any kind. In fact, the RHRA may take action against those who discourage complaints, or threaten or retaliate against a person who makes a complaint – up to and including imposing fines or even imprisonment.

The completed complaint form and all other required information can then be sent to the RHRA at the address listed on the form.

If you are unable to complete the complaint form, or have any questions about the process, call us at 1-855-ASK-RHRA (1-855-275-7472) and our knowledgeable staff will be happy to help.

What you can expect after you file a complaint

RHRA staff take all complaints seriously and aim to address complaints about violations of the Act or its regulations as quickly as possible. For complaints about issues that fall outside the scope of the Act, wherever possible, our staff will provide information about other resources that may be helpful in addressing the problem or concern.

When the RHRA reviews a complaint, it may:

- Contact the complainant to discuss the complaint in more detail.
- Make inquiries about the issues raised in the complaint.
- Conduct an inspection of the home.
- Resolve or mediate the complaint.
- Provide education to the complainant and/or the operator.
- Send a warning letter to the operator.
- Take other action.

The RHRA will send the complainant a written response setting out the decisions made and actions taken in connection with the complaint.

If you don't agree with the RHRA's decision

If the RHRA considers your complaint and decides to take no further action, you have the right to request a review by the Complaints Review Officer (CRO), who is independent of the RHRA. Details on how to make a written request for review and what happens once the CRO is involved are available at www.rhra.ca.

EMERGENCY FUND

The RHRA Emergency Fund was established for the benefit of residents (or former residents) of retirement homes. An individual may submit a claim to the RHRA for compensation from the fund when:

- Loss or damage to the retirement home has resulted in an emergency.
- Due to the emergency, the operator of the retirement home has been unable to safely provide normal accommodation or care to the individual in the retirement home.
- The individual has incurred costs to find, move to or pay for alternate accommodation, or to access alternate care providers.

Other criteria set out in the regulation may affect an individual's eligibility to submit a claim. For more information, contact the RHRA at 1-855-ASK-RHRA (1-855-275-7472).

RHRA resources at-a-glance

The RHRA offers helpful resources that are available to download and print at www.rhra.ca:

- The RHRA brochure
- Residents' Bill of Rights poster
- The RHRA's Plain Language Guide for the Retirement Homes Act, 2010
- A How-to Guide for Starting a Residents' Council

If you would prefer to receive these materials by mail, please call 1-855-ASK-RHRA (1-855-275-7472) to request copies from our staff.

Contact Us

55 York Street
Suite 700
Toronto, Ontario
M5J 1R7

1-855-ASK-RHRA
(1-855-275-7472)
info@rhra.ca
www.rhra.ca

The Retirement Homes Act, 2010 is available at www.ontario.ca/laws

